

A DOSE OF ART

Young children to master painters and sculptors are putting up their works at these galleries this week. Take a look

Boys and men are always told not to cry. Not to show emotion. That only girls cry. I would like to break this gender stereotype. We should be able to show emotion too.

Young thoughts

The 'Bridging Creativity' exhibition will highlight the imagination and unique vision of children. It will feature photographs, puppets, poster designs, making use of different materials and techniques. See them break gender stereotypes and admire scenes from villages and nature, among others, in their works.

Imagine Inc.

After a successful debut, where she sold out all her stock of 43 paintings, 10-year-old Alayna Zaid is back with another exhibition. Called Imaginarium II, the current collection could be described as 'complex yet accessible', showcasing her love for colours, textures, shapes, and abstract themes. Proceeds from the sale will go towards a cancer center in the city.
